Note: from about this point onwards the entries will be a little more heavily edited and comments about progress of various Standards on aspects of the curriculum will be omitted. I hope that what has been included to date gives something of the flavour of the learning experiences of children at this date. Of course, there are plenty of resources available that give more detailed pictures of what went on in country schools at this time, but this focuses on our little school.

Also, after 1910, some names, unless I am sure that the person involved is dead, may be entered in an incomplete form. This is order to comply as far as possible with Data Protection legislation and a form I have signed at the Dorset History Centre where I am not to publicise the names of any persons who may be living and about whom some references in the logbooks may give rise to embarrassment etc. (e.g. the name of a boy punished for a petty misdemeanour, but who in later life holds an elevated rank such as Chief Constable!!)

Apr 15 Arthur Delement (14) Agnes Hodges & Ethel Pinnock have left school this week. The first named having gone to work and the two latter having obtained the Labour Certificate.

Children needed the certificate in order to start work as it demonstrated their school work was of a reasonable standard. This system ensured that the workforce was competent at reading, maths and general knowledge, and guaranteed all children a basic level of education. Unfortunately it put pressure on bright children from poorer families to leave school as soon as possible. Once they had reached this basic standard of education they could start work and bring an extra wage to their household.

The certificate came into use under the Employment of Children Act 1903 and stipulated that no child under the age of 14 should be employed in any occupation before 6am or after 8pm or for more than nine and a half hours a day or on a Sunday. These regulations outlawed many of the bad practices relating to the employment of children, but were hard to enforce, particularly in remote mining and farming villages, or large cities with a high proportion of migrant labourers.

In times of high unemployment governments have often encouraged pupils to continue their education beyond the minimum age: it can improve their prospects of a better job, and helps keep the unemployment figures lower. When Annie left Darley Street Council School the school leaving age was 13 years. This rose to 14 years in 1918, 15 years in 1944, and 16 years in 1972. These changes were often strongly opposed at the time - by employers and parents, and also by pupils themselves. An example from the V&A Museum of Childhood to explain the Labour Certificate.

Copy of the report received in February:

Older Children: "This part of the school is showing better now. Reading, Handwriting, Spelling and Composition have all improved and are now fairly successful, and continual improvement will be looked for as the educational year advances.

Arithmetic continues to be wholly mechanical and the children of Class I failed in the simplest of everyday calculations. In order to secure the adequate preparation of the oral lessons the Teachers should keep "notes". Very little progress is made in the teaching of Music."

Infants' Class: The children are promising but more suitable methods of instruction should be followed. The Music would improve if regular Modulator practice were given."

Board of Education, Whitehall, London 24th June 1908 to Osborne L. E. A.

Sir, I am directed to forward a copy of a Report made by H. M. Inspector upon the above school.

The Board should be informed what steps will be taken to remedy the defects in the offices referred to in the appended report, and whether the managers can see their way to adopt the suggestion of the removal of the girls' offices to another position.

Your obedient servant

F. A. Selby-Briggs

Form 35 Encl.

Dorset, Local Education Authority
Osborne C of E School, No 158.

Copy of Report made by HMI Mr Dibben after visit of 17th June 1908:

The children at present play in the lane which joins the main road close to the school, as their playground has been used for some time as a garden for the Head Teacher.

The covering for the cess-pool appears to be in a dangerous state. There is no proper separation of the offices; the seats for older and younger boys are in one closet, those for older and younger girls are in another, and there is no separate closet for the Teacher's house.

If the playground were given back to the children it would be easy to place the girls' closets in the far corner away from the boys, and it would be an advantage to abolish the cess-pit and adopt the pail system for both sets of offices.

Signed R. W.

1910 From now on I shall only be recording particularly significant entries in the log book. Under the terms of the Data Protection Act I am not to print, without permission, names of any persons who may be alive when this was edited and transcribed in 2010. The idea underlying the selection of entries has been to assist family historians in fleshing out a bit more of their relatives' lives, and for others to suggest something of the life of a small country school at the end of the 19th century and the early years of the 20th century. Education in this period has been extensively studied and there are innumerable academic and more popular studies available – this small contribution focuses specifically on our village and it is hoped is of some small interest to visitors to the web site.

1911. Copy of report by HMI Mr H W Irvine:

“Reading and writing show improvement but the use of headline copy books would be more effective if the children were expected to copy the headline. Arithmetic is still unintelligent: no practical work has been attempted since the Educational year. The lessons in other branches of instruction are now prepared with more care and are consequently more effective.

“A progressive syllabus in Needlework should be prepared. Representations of common and natural objects should not be limited to outline only, and scale drawing should have close relation to Arithmetic. The Infants' teacher does very fair work but her increasing deafness is a serious drawback; the scheme of observation lessons for infants should be enlarged so as to retain the interest of the children.

“The Head Teacher should report regularly on the progress of the school.

“The admission and summary registers are imperfectly kept.”

Inspected on 27 Mar 1911

Signed: A R Rust, Correspondent.
